

40–55 litre packs

A BOGONG BUYING GUIDE

374 Lt Bourke Street, Melbourne 3000 | (03) 9600 0599 | bogong@bogong.com.au | bogong.com.au

A good daypack is a great companion. At Bogong we have urban daypacks for everyday use, technical daypacks for bushwalking and hiking, larger daypacks ideal for trekking the Kokoda Trail or the Camino de Santiago, speciality daypacks for skiing, mountaineering and alpine use, waterproof daypacks, climbing daypacks, ultralight daypacks for adventure racing... you get the picture.

HOW TO CHOOSE A DAYPACK WHAT TYPE OF PACK SHOULD I GET?

There are a few factors to think about when you're choosing a daypack. You'll need to consider what you're primarily using the daypack for. Some daypacks have quite specific features: for example, a mountaineering-style pack will have crampon, ski and ice axe attachment points. Other daypacks, such as a hiking daypack, may have more generic features.

Another consideration is the litreage of the daypack. You'll need to give some thought to the overall load capacity of the daypack in order to ensure you'll be able to fit in the gear you want to take.

Daypacks in the 40–55 litre category would be classed as day-and-a-half packs or overnighers, generally speaking. Depending on how you pack your gear, a 40–55 litre pack may be perfectly adequate for your personal gear on multiday trips – particularly if your food, water and accommodation is otherwise catered for. This is why the 40–55 litre daypacks are so popular with Camino and Kokoda trekkers.
